Just like that, the Halifax Mooseheads' inspiring playoff run is over.

Liberals unveil new policy

AGM. Stephen McNeil celebrates five years as provincial party leader

ALEX BOUTILIER alex.boutilier@metronews.c

Provincial Liberals got a sneak peek at the beginnings of their party's election platform in Halifax over the weekend.

At the party's annual general meeting, Liberal Leader Stephen McNeil unveiled a series of policy points that will form part of his party's platform when an election is called — likely next year.

They include "breaking up" Nova Scotia Power Inc.'s monopoly by allowing renewable energy producers to sell directly to customers, essentially dismantling the province's district-health-authority system and reversing two years of education cuts from the governing NDP.

"It very much is (the start of a platform)," said McNeil in an interview on Sunday. "This is about putting out there some ideas (about) where we want to take our province. We know that Nova Scotians are not happy."

McNeil opened the threeday AGM with a speech at the Lord Nelson Friday night. In it, he attacked the NDP as "champions of the status quo" — taking aim at everything from the province's economic plan (specifically, the Liberals doubt there is one) to the ever-popular topic of NDP advertising costs.

"Using your money to mislead you is wrong," McNeil told the crowd.

"The reality is, families are struggling to do more with less. There is despair in some parts of this province. People feel prosperity is for someone else, somewhere else. That's wrong."

But when an election is called — likely next year — the Grits are in for a serious battle. On the one side, the current official Opposition faces an entrenched and experienced majority government that will likely release more good news as the election nears. On the other, the Progressive Conservatives, who now only have seven seats in the 52-seat legislature, have been consistently polling neck and neck with the red team.

Rae said in Halifax over the weekend despite a lacklustre showing in some recent polls, the Liberal party's underlying approach is stronger than the NDP's.

A couple of recent polls put the Liberals in third place, well back of the NDP and governing Conservatives.

Cellphones. Bill would cap cancellation fees

People in Nova Scotia would have their cellphone-contract cancellation fees capped and be told of any changes that would increase their bills under legislation proposed that aims to regulate the mobile-phone industry.

Service Nova Scotia Minister John MacDonell said on Friday amendments to the province's Consumer Protection Act would cap cancellation fees at $50 and require telecommunications companies to provide minimum monthly costs of service in contracts and advertising.

MacDonell said the legislation is in response to public complaints and is designed to protect consumers from hidden and excessive fees.

"Concerns have come up that consumers who enter into cellphone contracts ... feel they may be the victims of unfair and unclear contracts with excessive cancellation fees," MacDonell told a news conference at the legislature.

"In short, many consumers feel trapped in their cellphone contracts."

Companies would also have to inform customers of contract changes that would increase their bills and would be re-

A spokesman for the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association said the industry is concerned about the increasing layers of regulation from province to province, warning that they could add costs that would be passed on to consumers.

"You could end up with a situation in Canada where you have a patchwork of 13 different sets of regulations," said Marc Choma, adding that the industry would prefer a national set of regulations since it is regulated by Ottawa. Suspected wolf sightings in Atlantic Canada

Animal planet.

Wolves may have arrived by travelling on ice floes

The sightings of two suspected wolves in Atlantic Canada in recent weeks has left experts wondering why the animals may be in a region of the country where they have not been seen for decades.

An 82-pound canine was shot in Newfoundland in early March. At the beginning of April, a 90-pound animal was shot in New Brunswick. As the first kill of his

As the first kill of his coyote-hunting season, New Brunswick hunter Jacques Mallet couldn't believe the size of the animal.

Tumultuous times for teachers pension plan

The trustees for the Nova Scotia teachers pension plan say volatile world markets contributed to a $511-million growth in the plan's unfunded liability.

The annual report released Friday by the Nova Scotia Pension Agency says the unfunded liability for the plan is $1.65 billion as of Dec. 31, 2011.

Diminished investment returns accounted for nearly half of the increase to the unfunded liability, said John Carter, chairman of the Nova Scotia Teachers Pension Plan Trustee Inc. "When I killed it, we were a bit nervous weighing it," Mallet said.

Mallet called New Brunswick's Natural Resources Department, which took samples for DNA testing.

"If it is a coyote, I think it would be a record for North America," he said.

Biologists at Natural Resources believe wolves were hunted to extinction in New Brunswick by 1860, two years after legislation was enacted by the government to "encourage the destruction of wolves in this province."

Fred Harrington, an animal psychologist, has studied wolves and coyotes for over 30 years and says he believes the animals are likely wolves based on their size alone.

He says both animals could have made it to Newfoundland and New Brunswick on ice floes, at which point they would look for territory and mates.

"Finding a territory would be kind of easy because there are no territories as far as I know staked by wolves south of the St. Lawrence River," he said.

"Wolves can move hundreds of kilometres in search of suitable territory and in search of a suitable mate."

Harrington says it's also possible the animals were kept as household pets and escaped, or they could have been deliberately released in a "misguided attempt to bring the animal back to their neck of the woods"

The Nova Scotia Government and General Employees Union said on its website Friday that 90 per cent of the membership who voted approved the deal. Under the deal, a board of arbitration will have to come up with pay increases that range between 6.5 per cent and nine per cent over three years. The contract says a final decision should be made by June 15.

Deadline deal

The deal was reached last Wednesday, just hours ahead of a 7 a.m. strike deadline for Thursday.

"I'm very relieved and happy for the workers and indeed the patients and all Nova Scotians," said Corbett.

He said the government was ready to consider some form of back-to-work legislation had the deal been rejected.

Judges to weigh in on jury selection in aboriginal cases

Ontario Court of Appeal case. No onreserve First Nations people were on the juries that convicted two aboriginal men appealing their cases

The makeup of juries in Ontario goes on trial this week as two convicted killers fight their guilty verdicts in a case that goes to the heart of the justice system.

At issue before the province's top court is whether the aboriginal men were treated shabbily because on-reserve First Nations people were excluded from the juries that convicted them.

'Our society has proven to be very efficient at charging First Nations and jailing First Nations," said defence lawyer Julian Falconer.

"We don't seem so good at constructively involving First Nations in the justice system, such as their participation in the jury system," he said.

However, in an unusual twist, the court put the ruling on hold in light of the constitutional challenge sparked by the jury-representation issue.

A non-aboriginal jury in Kenora, Ont., convicted Kokopenace in 2008 of stabbing a friend to death.

Also involved in the Court of Appeal hearing is Clare Spiers. He was convicted of first-degree murder in 2007 in Barrie for kidnapping a woman and slitting her throat. No on-reserve residents were among the people offered for his jury. The years-long under-representation of aboriginals first came to light at coroner's inquests in northern Ontario into the 2007 deaths of Jacy Pierre, who died in police custody, and teenager Reggie Bushie, who drowned.

Canadian on death row

Inmate to plead for life at heáring

The lone Canadian on death row in the United States is expected to make a plea for his life at his clemency hearing in Montana this week.

Ronald Smith, 54, has been on death row since 1982 after he and an accomplice, both high on drugs, marched Thomas Running Rabbit and Harvey Mad Man Jr. into the woods and shot both of them in the head.

It was a cold-blooded crime. They wanted to steal the men's car, but Smith also said he wanted to know what it was like to kill someone.

His is the final name on the list of 16 witnesses put forward by his attorneys for the two-day clemency hearing before the Montana Board of Pardons and Parole beginning Wednesday.

The hearing is being held near the penitentiary where Smith has spent the last three decades.

The Harper government initially refused to back Smith's calls for clemency. But the Federal Court ruled it must follow the long-standing practice of lobbying on behalf of Canadians sentenced to death. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Weakened al-Qaida still dreaming of U.S. attack

Bin Laden. U.S. citizens in Pakistan and beyond are being warned to be vigilant ahead of May 2 anniversary

A year after the U.S. raid that killed Osama bin Laden, al-Qaida is hobbled and hunted, too busy surviving for the moment to carry out another 9-11-style attack on U.S. soil. But the terrorist network

But the terrorist network dreams still of payback, and U.S. counterterrorist officials warn that, in time, its offshoots may deliver.

A decade of wars in Iraq and Afghanistan that has cost the U.S. about $1.28 trillion and 6,300 U.S. troops' lives has forced al-Qaida's affiliates to regroup, from Yemen to Iraq. Bin Laden's No. 2, Ayman al-Zawahri, is thought to be hiding, out of U.S. reach, in Pakistan's mountains, just as bin Laden was for so many years.

"It's wishful thinking to say al-Qaida is on the brink of defeat," says Seth Jones, a Rand analyst and adviser to U.S. special operations forces. "They have increased global presence, the number of attacks by affiliates has risen, and in some places like Yemen, they've expanded control of territory."

U.S. officials say bin Laden's old team is all but dismantled. But they say new branches are hitting Western targets and U.S. allies overseas, and still aspire to match their parent organization's milestone of Sept. 11, 2001. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Allegations. Former SNC-Lavalin exec arrested

A former executive of Canadian engineering giant SNC-Lavalin has been arrested in Switzerland.

A spokeswoman for the Swiss government says Riadh Ben Aissa is accused of fraud and corruption.

Jacqueline Buhlman says in an email to The Canadian Press that the allegations are in connection with alleged business dealings in northern Africa, but won't comment further.

Aissa was the executive vice-president of construction, but parted ways with the company earlier this year along with another SNC executive.

WHY IS HEALTH CARE PUT ON THE LINE?

URBAN COMPASS Stephen Kimber halifax@metronews.co

Last week's to-the-edge-of-theledge, past-the-last-minute contract settlement between Capital Health and its 3,600 health workers raises all sorts of difficult but intriguing questions

The first, and most immediate, of course, is this: could the disruption — even without an actual strike, the anticipation cancelled 560 elective surgeries and emptied 172 beds — have been avoided?

The short answer is probably not. Both sides have legitimate, vital interests in the outcome and only the pressure of a looming deadline smacking up against the real-life consequences of not settling creates the conditions necessary for compromise.

So long as there is collective bargaining, we will have brinkmanship.

But should we even have collective bargaining in health care? Let's come back to that.

Is the settlement fair? We won't know the full financial implications until an arbitrator picks either the arbitrator picks either the union's (nine per cent over three years) or the province's (6.5 per cent) final position. The province's finance department has undoubtedly already crunched both scenarios, so Premier Darrell Dexter should disclose them so we can discuss their merits now.

This year's provincial budget includes a $199-million "restructuring" line item, supposedly to cover contract-settlement contingencies above the government's hoped-for one per cent salary increases, so the deal may not deflect the government's goal of balancing the books by next year. But it will raise the bar for other public-sector workers.

But other numbers do come into play when asking if the settlement makes sense. Nova Scotians' cost of living increased by 3.7 per cent last year while wage settlements barely nudged 0.4 per cent. Even the union's final demand just keeps pace with cost-of-living increases just keeps pace with cost-of-living increases.

One more, different set of numbers: the settlement calls for an across-the-board wage increase, meaning those at the lowest end of the union's 100 or so different job categories—those who need more most—will get the least. How fair is that?

Back to collective bargaining and essential services. Given that the final salary settlement ended up in the hands of an arbitrator anyway, why not cut to the chase and ban strikes in health care?

That, my friend, is a whole other discussion. Let's have it.

Want to buy a town in Georgia? Developer looks to sell

A developer in south Georgia is looking for someone to buy a small town.

Toomsboro, a small community with about 700 residents, has one convenience store, a florist, a custom-cabinet shop and a post office. The Coastal Courier reports that developer David Bumgardner, who owns many of the properties in town, is putting them on the market.

Bumgardner bought some of the properties from preservationist Bill Lucado and snagged others at an auction about a decade ago with the intention of turning Toomsboro into a quaint tourist town.

But his plans changed. Now Bumgardner and Lucado are putting the town up for sale again. Lucado thinks it would be a perfect fit for a movie production company seeking a set or a music company looking for a great venue. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

First year of marriage a '10 out of 10'

Britain's sweethearts still adored worldwide

It's been a year since they declared their love for each other in the most anticipated wedding of the decade, but 12 months haven't been enough to quell the public passion for the newest royal couple.

Prince William and Kate spent their first year as newlyweds under the sort of global spotlight usually reserved for Hollywood alisters

The couple retreated from the spotlight after their nuptials, only to re-emerge with greater star power than ever on their first visit abroad. The newlyweds' nine-day, whirlwind tour of Canada, observers say, showed the couple off at their best.

couple off at their best.

Their more informal attitudes set the tone for the trip as they freely mingled with rapturous crowds, participated in Canadian sports such as street hockey and faced off against one another in a dragon boat race. Kate's now legendary fashion sense was also on full display as she modeled outfits from homegrown designers and even donned the national colours in honour of Canada Day.

Anniversary

"They've covered all the bases. They've had an international trip, they've had local visits, work with charitable causes. They've engaged in their work roles admirably. I think you could really give them a 10 out of 10 when it comes to their performance over the first year."

Rafal Heydel-Mankoo Royal commentator

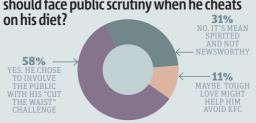

Observers say:

- Much of Kate's behaviour is the result of lessons learned in the aftermath of previous broken royal marriages.
- William's mother, Diana, and former aunt, Sarah Ferguson, both complained about feeling isolated and overwhelmed in their first years of marriage to royalty. Kate has received extensive coaching on maintaining a balance between public and private responsibilities.

"Not bad for a physical wreck, James," the villain taunts, as Her Majesty's finest spy rains Walther PPK bullets at him. "You should see my latest toy," he laughs, and an explosion tears through the subway station.

Welcome to Skyfall, Bond 23. At Pinewood Studios in leafy Buckinghamshire, shooting is nearly complete on the latest edition of cinema's longest-running fran-chise, 50 years after Dr. No introduced us to Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang.

There is a sense of relief on set as, four years after Quantum of Solace, a troubled production nears a happy ending. Studio MGM's bankruptcy delayed filming for a year, an anxious wait for the cast and crew.

"It was driving us crazy," says producer Barbara Broccolli. "It would have been very disappointing not to have a film in our anniversary year. We just kept being focused and kept working."

Eventually the financial problems were resolved by a partnership with Sony, and now that the light of Skyfall's November release is in sight, James Bond himself — Daniel Craig — is feeling confident. "This sets a new benchmark," the 44-year-old said. "The talent that we managed to pool in this movie is just phenomenal."

The delay allowed time for an A-list cast to be recruited on both sides of the camera. American Beauty Oscar-winner Sam Mendes directs, with Javier Bardem and Ralph Fiennes among the new stars.

Despite the injection of heavyweight talent, Craig says fans of the all-action series need not worry the movie will be too serious. "Sam's a boy. He likes to blow shit up." Pyrotechnic sequences to watch out for include a subway train destroying an underground set and a gunfight in a hall of mirrors.

Plot details have been highly classified, but Sony has revealed that MI6 comes under attack, and that Judi Dench's M is somehow responsible.

Bardem plays the criminal mastermind Raoul Silva who leads the assault on Bond and the secret service. Advance shots reveal the targets include Bond's home — Skyfall lodge, seen for the first time in the series' history.

Are you a celebrity couple who needs a good reason to send out a press release? But you don't feel like 1) Announcing a pregnancy or 2) Getting a divorce? Then just renew your wedding vows! It's a surefire way to get some attention thrown your way.

Justin Bieber is under fire in Indonesia after some offhand remarks he made about the country, where he recorded a track on his new album

During an event in London last week, Bieber said the song was recorded in "some random country" where "they didn't know what they were doing." And now folks in Indonesia are striking back: this weekend, North Sumatra teen pop radio station KISS 105 FM banned Bieber's music, according to the Jakarta Post.

"His tone was very condescending and he is just a 19-year-old boy. This is a country with more than 200 million citizens," Kiss FM executive producer Anggi Simanjuntak says, while one of the station's on-air personalities says the ban would be lifted if Bieber 'apologized in a sweet manner and promised not to say such things about Indonesia again."

MACPHERSON

Are they safe? Are they educational? Do we really want to encourage our kids to hang out in front of a computer screen all day?

Krista Swanson, a blogger for yummymummyclub. ca, says computing for a kid is a new reality.

"We can't say kids 'shouldn't' be on the computer because other kids are," says Swanson, "As long as you know they're safe."

The mother of a five-year-old boy says she stills thinks parents should "limit screen time."

And there really is no "right" amount of time either, says Swanson.

Parents have to know their kids and their kids' limits to determine a healthy amount of time to be in front of a computer, she adds.

It's easy for kids to become obsessed with an activity if they really like it, be it reading, sports or surf-ing the web, Swanson says "When they are on the when they are on the computer, you don't just walk away," says Swanson. "Use it as a tool to build conversations or foster activities. Don't just use it as a babysitter."

One kids' website that meets Swanson's approval is totallyrandom.ca, a new (and Canadian!) site targeting kids aged seven to 11.

"Totally Random introduces kids to editing digital media and safe social networking," says Chelsea

O'Connor, the production manager for totallyrandom. ca. "We give the kids challenges on the website so they have a starting point for their creativity."

The site combines television broadcasts hosted by three kids with interactive computer gaming.

Kids create a profile with an avatar name and animation. They have access to a number of creative tools to create and edit artwork, or they can watch Totally Random "episodes" online.

Swanson says totallyran dom.ca is colourful and easy for kids to figure out.

"One of the great things about Totally Random is there's no way for them to accidentally click off the site," says Swanson. "Some of the more 'cheaply done' sites have advertisements that may not apply to kids. Even if some of the games kids end up playing on the computer are mindless, Swanson says there is educational value in everything. Kids are still practicing motor skills by interacting with the computer and mouse, the same way they might learn those skills from playing board games.

Cadbury rallying Canadiáns tó help send bicycles to those who need them most

BEN KNIGHT

A little thing here can make a huge difference somewhere

That's the simple thought behind The Bicycle Factory, an innovative plan by Cadbury to send bicycles to Africa for those who need them the most.

"We rally Canadians to help build bicycles for rural cocoa-growing communities in Ghana," says Aditi Burman, senior promotions manager at Kraft Foods, parent company of Cadbury.

"It's an interactive website — thebicyclefactory.ca — and what people do is they click on Cadbury product icons and turn them into bike parts. Every 100 parts turn into a real bike, until we reach this year's goal of 5,000 bikes."

The idea is to help sustain the farming communities that grow the most essential raw material for Cadbury's choco-

"The bikes go to middle-school students who live three-to-ten kilometres away from their school," she ex-

"So it actually helps to increase access to education. These students are at the highest risk of dropping out of school, because they live too far away. Cadbury has been very active in Ghana, to help the communities in many different ways."

Often, we think of sustainability in terms of natural resources. Here's a chance to apply that same important principle directly to the future of some bright, clever, curious

"It's a different, deeper level of sustainability. What we ultimately want to do is sustain the livelihood of our cocoa growers. This is another way in which we can do it." Burman notes that a bicycle means something very different in Ghana than it does here in Canada.

"Canadians think about bikes for fun, fitness and fresh air, and they're great for the environment, of course. Our relation with bikes is really as an alternative to a car. But in places like rural Africa, bikes are actually an alternative to walking. It's a basic mobility issue.'

One lucky Bicycle Factory builder will have a chance to experience all this first-hand.

"The grand prize is that someone will actually have the chance to deliver the bicycles in Ghana. There's a lot of fun things going on.'

Robbie DeFulviis isn't sure exactly how far the game-winning puck was over the goal line on Sunday, nor does he really care.

All that mattered to the 19-year-old forward was that his goal at 8:02 of overtime lifted his Rimouski Oceanic to a 3-2 win over the Halifax Mooseheads at the Metro Centre and advanced them to the QMJHL final.

DeFulviis, a fourthliner, chipped a puck past a Mooseheads' defender and drove to the net before beating goaltender Zach Fucale.

"I just wanted to put it on net, and I guess it went off Fucale's stick and popped up over his head," DeFulviis said. "It was really close, but I was skating by and I saw it cross. That's why I celebrated."

The referees reviewed the play for about a minute before confirming it was a good goal, sending the Oceanic into a second celebration.

MATTHEW WUEST

The one player who does everything for the Halifax Mooseheads suddenly could do nothing but watch.

Suspended for the final game of his major-junior hockey career, Cameron hockey career, Cameron Critchlow stood in the press box high above the Metro Centre ice surface while his teammates fought valiantly to save a playoff run that had galvanized the Mooseheads' fan base.

With his No. 11 jersey hanging from the score clock to motivate his teammates, the captain cheered every big goal, slammed his palm down in frustration at missed chances, and visited the dressing room between

The second time, Briere left no doubt and put away Game 1, once and for all.

Briere continued to stamp his name alongside Philadelphia's post-season greats, scoring the winning goal 4:36 into overtime, leading the Flyers to a 4-3 win over the New Jersey Devils on Sunday to open this Eastern Conference semifinal series.

"He has his ups and downs, but he just picks it up in the playoffs. And that's what mat-ters," Flyers coach Peter Laviolette said. "He's a guy who consistently gets it done.

Indeed, no Flyer is as clutch in the post-season as Briere.

His second attempt at the winner came minutes after his earlier goal was overturned on review because he kicked the puck into the net. But he wasted no time making up for it, firing a slapper past Martin Brodeur for his seventh goal of the playoffs. Brodeur was screened in front by Philadelphia for-ward James van Riemsdyk.

"When you look at the replay, it's kind of obvious," Briere said of the reversal. "But I needed to stop pouting and get back my focus in overtime. I ended up getting a break."

In doing so, Briere, who also scored in the second period, now has 106 points in 104 career post-season games.

"Îs it pressure? I think it's fun," he said of playoff hock-CV. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS customers only that are Nova Scotia residents. Under this offer for a $200 loan, the cost of borrowing for the payday loan is $10 for each $100 advanced for a 14 day term. As such, under this offer, for a loan of $200 for 14 days, the cost of borrowing is $20, with a total payback amount of $220. Regular fees apply on subsequent loans and the cost of borrowing for a $100 loan for 14 days would be $122 and an Annual Percentage Rate of 573.57%. For a $300 loan for a term of 14 days made under this offer, the cost of borrowing would be $20 on the first $200 advanced and $22 on the next $100 advanced for a total cost of borrowing of $42. The maximum allowable cost of borrowing under payday loan agreements in Nova Scotia is $25 per each $100 advanced.

Aggresive Jays put Mariners away

The Jays closed out a weekend series with two wins over the Seattle Mariners, and now await their biggest game of the season so far Monday when Yu Darvish and the Texas Rangers come to town.

"Just another ball game," said Jays catcher Jeff Mathis, whose two-run home run capped a five-run eighth Sunday in Toronto's 7-2 victory. With ESPN jumping across the border to broadcast the game, Darvish's debut is shaping up to be anything but just another day at the ballpark.

The Jays, meanwhile, need to get down to the business at hand, which is making adjustments to an offence that has counted on Edwin Encarnacion's monster month while hiding subpar efforts from Jose Bautista and other players.

Starting pitcher Henderson Alvarez finally got a win Sunday - and some much-deserved run support - and registered his first victory at home in 15 career starts.

Toronto has received at least five innings from its starting pitchers in every game so far this month, an effort which could easily have translated into a better record than 12-10.
